DETAILED ACTION

Response to Amendment

The amendments filed April 2, 2005 have been entered as the scope of claim 11 has not been changed by the amendment and all other claims have been cancelled.

However, the rejection of claim 11 from the Final Rejection is maintained.

Response to Arguments

Applicant argues that there is nothing in the cited references that teaches or suggests the process of claim 1. This argument is not found convincing. Although the individual references may not teach the claimed invention, the combination of references suggests each and every limitation as outlined in the Office Action of September 9, 2004. One cannot show nonobviousness by attacking references individually where the rejections are based on combinations of references. See In re Keller, 642 F.2d 413, 208 USPQ 871 (CCPA 1981); In re Merck & Co., 800 F.2d 1091, 231 USPQ 375 (Fed. Cir. 1986). Specifically, Takemori teaches the art recognized suitability of using multiple nozzles and Chiu teaches to locate the nozzles at peaks.

Applicant alleges unexpected results in that the claimed invention provides a uniform layer. This is not found convincing. Takemori teaches vibration in combination with multiple nozzles results in a uniform coating. Therefore, a uniform coating cannot be considered unexpected.
